FROSTY MORNING AT GODAFOSS

BY RAINER GROSSKOPF

A frosty morning at the mighty waterfalls of Godafoss. After a few days of heavy snowfalls the sky cleared up over night – time for me to visit the waterfalls at sunrise. Minus 15 degrees Celsius and a cold wind made it a torture to wait for sunrise. But finally the sunrise compensated me with pastel reddish color on the snow covered mountains, creating a harmonic picture with the white snow and the blue-green water of the falls.

Equipment: Canon 5D Mark II

A gorgeous picture with all the colors, but you must have been frozen! Thanks for sharing, I'm sure I won't be there any time soon to get a picture myself!

Godafoss, popular amongst photographers. For being on an isolated island in the north Atlantic, there sure are a lot of photo-nerds willing to make a long journey to shoot these falls. Perhaps the journey and experience outweigh the photos. Nonetheless, I commend you on your shot and editing.
